Baumgardt's Lectures.
"The Romantic Rhine." Baumgardt's third evening lecture in his current course, visioned for an appreciative audience at the Belasco last night, the "castles and legends" of a noble river. With a prefacing reminder that the Rhine is 800 miles long and flows from the Alps to the North sea, and that "it possesses the wonderful rapidity of the Hudson, the historical reminiscences of the Tiber and the romantic phantoms and legends of the Euphrates and the Nile," the speaker told with Scherz-nazad-like thrills, the thousand and one legends born by the river's thirty centuries of years. Contrasted with the Rhine of today, its banks alive with substantial cities, modern craft on its waters and new bridges spanning its blue, the lecturer peopled once more the time-defying castles and less enduring ruins on crag and mountain that still give picturesque evidence of a past from Caesar to Napoleon, from the mist of the singing Lorelei to the history of the present unsettled today. The lecture was illustrated with artistically colored lantern views and unusually realistic motion pictures of a tourist cruise along the Rhine. "The Romance of Man," presented in the afternoon, gave a world-sweep opportunity for the lecturer's eloquence and apparently inexhaustible knowledge in a description of the human being considered as a race. From the hieroglyphics of that inscrutable brown being known as pre-historic man to the latest achievements of modern times, the world's master was described and pictured from nakedness to dress suits—each epoch in his progressive stages so interwoven with the peoples of the past as to be of study-value alike to the scholar and to that multitudinous being the general audience. It has been requested that Mr. Baumgardt repeat the "Romance of Man" in his evening course.

STRIKING OBJECTS SEEN IN THE EVENING SKIES

Many Brilliant Star Groups Reach Their Highest Points—Variety of Coloring.

In the course of an "evening among the stars" at this season of the year the observer of the heavens finds some of the most striking objects of celestial observation of the entire year. In the passing of February the midwinter month, many of the brilliant star groups have reached their highest points above us and begin to recede from vision, to be succeeded by those of the oncoming spring season.

The attention of the casual observer is directed to the brilliant "dog star," better known as Sirius, the brightest of all the fixed stars, which is said to be one million times as far from us as is the sun, which is 92,700,000 miles from our earth. In the regions formed by Sirius and its numerous but much fainter neighbors in space there may be found Lepus, Columba, Argo and others, some orange and red in color, the mystery of which has been the wonder and admiration of astronomers of all the ages, and still remains the unevolved astronomical enigma, even when observed through the greatest telescopes of the present day.

Evening Sky Changing.

In the changing appearance of the evening sky at this time our planets, Venus, Mars and Jupiter, are too near the sun for satisfactory observation, and are soon to change their positions in the sky. Saturn now rules in the evening, and is easily seen, shining high in the heavens almost on the border line between Taurus and Gemini. This, the most wonderful planet of our system, is in an excellent position for observation, the rings are widely opened out, which gives astronomers a splendid opportunity to study and observe this wonderful formation, which, with Saturn's many satellites, has placed him first in the list of all the objects in the heavens.

The occultation of the moon, which occurs tomorrow at 2 a. m., in its passage over the remarkable cluster of stars called the "Beehive," will work an interesting phenomenon in the heavens, though the moon, being so near full, will mar the beauty of this phenomenon in obscuring the disappearance of the stars, as one by one our satellite passes over them.

PRESIDENT WILSON ASKED TO ADDRESS CONFERENCE

Secretaries Daniels and Bryan Have Promised to Speak at M. P. Gathering Here.

President Wilson has been invited to address the Maryland Methodist Protestant annual conference to be held in the Rhode Island Avenue M. P. Church during the week beginning April 7. The chief executive, it is said, has not given positive assurance that he would attend at some time during the week and deliver an address, but received the delegation of ministers cordially and promised to answer later.

Secretary Daniels promised to deliver an address Friday evening of conference week, while Secretary Bryan also promised to address the conference one evening.

Rev. Dr. John S. Bowers, who has served as president of the conference for the past three years, it is said, will likely be re-elected. The same difficulty which has arisen for several years, that of supplying all of the charges of the conference with ministerial timber, will, it is said, again confront the president. One, and probably two, of the younger ministers of the conference will not be available when the appointments are made up this year.

SUES TO RECOVER WILL OF MARTHA WASHINGTON

State of Virginia Seeks Possession of Document Claimed by J. P. Morgan.

John G. Pollard, attorney general of the state of Virginia, and John L. Barbour of counsel for complainant, today filed a petition in the Supreme Court of the United States for leave to make a motion for an injunction against J. Pierpont Morgan of New York to restrain him from disposing of the will of Martha Washington, wife of the first President of the United States, until the court may order the defendant to deliver the will to the oratrix.

The brief filed in support of the petition was dated June 21, 1902, and the will was admitted to probate before the county court of Fairfax county, whereby the will became the property of the commonwealth of Virginia and a public record thereof. It is contended that the will is a chattel which "has such special extraordinary, uncommon and unique value that it cannot be replaced by means of money, and is not susceptible of being compensated for by any practicable or certain measure of damages."

Muniment of Title.

It is contended further that the will is a muniment of title, under which large and valuable real and personal estates located within the commonwealth of Virginia have been disposed of. The brief contends that the will was wrongfully and illegally abstracted from the possession of the commonwealth, and has come into the possession of the defendant, who, it is contended, has not acquired, either in law or equity, any title to the will. It is requested that the court order the defendant to deliver to the oratrix the document in question, and asserts his assents right thereto.

Equity Court Only Recourse.

The brief concludes as follows: "Inasmuch, therefore, as your oratrix is remediless in the premises, save in a court of equity, she prays that the said John Pierpont Morgan be made a party defendant to this bill and be required to answer the same, an answer under oath being waived; that the defendant, although the defendant to deliver said document to your oratrix, and pending a decree to that effect, that he be enjoined and restrained from disposing thereof and removing the same beyond the jurisdiction of this court or that he be required to place the same in some appropriate custody to await the said final judgment of this court, and that your oratrix be granted such other and further relief, general and special, as in the premises may seem meet."

SAVES INCOME TAX FINE.

Senator Kern Mails Return Blank Just in Time.

Senator John W. Kern of Indiana, democratic leader of the Senate, nearly overlooked making the tax returns on his income in time to avoid the penalties. A newspaper item stating that the Treasury Department would enforce vigorously all penalties upon those who failed to have their returns in the hands of the revenue collectors by today caught his eye yesterday. The senator was galvanized into immediate action. He dashed to his office at the Capitol, found a return blank and, after considerable effort, located a notary public and sent his statement off by special delivery mail to the Indianapolis collector of revenue.
